

THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

GOVERNOR SAMUEL W. PENNYPACKER'S
MESSAGE APPROVING THE BILL IN RESTRAINT OF ITS LIBERTY

AND

CHARLES EMORY SMITH'S EDITORIAL
IN PROTEST

PREFATORY

The struggle over the right of free discussion is more than three centuries old. It is a part of the ceaseless conflict between progress and reaction. Free speech and a free press are the bulwarks of civil and religious liberty.

This publication is the fruit of strong individual convictions on this subject, and of exceptional liberality. The enactment of a law in Pennsylvania designed to restrict the freedom of the press renewed the old battle. The message of Governor Pennypacker approving this law, and the instant and powerful protest of journalism precipitated and chrystallized the issue. The utterance of this protest in THE PHILADELPHIA PRESS struck a responsive chord in the breast of a patriotic and high-minded citizen of earnest feeling and vigorous purpose. His sense of the public safety, and of the value of free thought and free discussion, revolted against the blow aimed at the foundation of republican institutions, and he wished to emphasize the remonstrance. In a flattering letter to the writer of the article he spoke of it as "every line inspired by indignation, sincere pity and disappointment" at the prostitution of official position to personal feeling. "I would sooner," he said, "have written that editorial, breathing in every line the spirit of an honest man, than have been Governor a dozen times of even a great Commonwealth like Pennsylvania."

His desire to diffuse and perpetuate this protest of journalism found additional expression in substantial form, and the result is this little volume.

THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

*Editorial from The Philadelphia Press, May 13, 1903, by

We are profoundly grieved, for Governor Pennypacker's own sake, that he has made the irretrievable mistake of signing the Grady-Salus libel bill, and of adding to that wrong the still greater folly of an unspeakably shallow, silly and wrong-headed message of attempted justification. In one sense his act is no surprise. His feelings have long been known. He has been weak enough to expose his wounds openly to all the world. His festering sores have been all too plain. But we could not believe that he would permit his personal grievance to blind him to all other considerations so far as to betray him into a grave public wrong, into open disregard of solemn constitutional obligations, into unworthy methods and artifices and into a disingenuous extenuation which in many parts is so puerile as to be beneath contempt.

We must speak with absolute truth and candor. THE PRESS cannot afford to be false to itself or its character. It cannot imitate Governor Pennypacker in letting any personal feeling mislead it into any public expression which will not stand the cold test of reason and of time. Governor Pennypacker is an honest and well-meaning man. He has done good service in the executive chair. THE PRESS takes back nothing of what it has said in these respects. It has sometimes, indeed, remained silent where it could not commend. Before and during the campaign Judge Pennypacker, amid much that was right, said things so inexpressibly foolish that his judicious friends could only turn their faces and hang their heads in shame. But these things had no practical importance; they did not affect any serious act, and there was a generous disposition to let them pass and think only of his undoubted probity. His present attitude shows the same strange intellectual waywardness and perversity; but unfortunately here it concerns the most vital public interests, and it compels a recognition of the lamentable truth that an honest man, under the smart of a personal sting, has proved himself so narrow, so jaundiced, so pitifully small, as to share in a great public wrong and destroy what might have been an honorable fame.

Before fully speaking of the character of the Governor's act let us examine his statement. Had he been frank he would simply have said: "I am dreadfully sore under public caricature, and so I make the effort to stop the cartoons." Not being candid he undertakes to mask the real fact with a veil of reasons. We do not doubt that on the first reading of his paper many unreflecting people will feel that it has much force. But it will not bear a moment's intelligent and serious scrutiny. It is disingenuous, dissembling and deceptive. The Governor recites a large number of instances of injurious publication, real or imaginary, affecting the business man, the virtuous woman, the clergyman and so on, and says they ought to be protected. As if all these cases were not fully covered by the existing law! No one knows better than Governor Pennypacker that the present statute provides ample protection in every illustration he names. But by a studied suppression of the truth he would mislead uninformed people. He asks why newspapers should not be held liable for injuries growing out of negligence as well as other people. As if they were not! He knows perfectly well that they are! He knows, too, that, until the reform of the libel law in 1897, a most harsh and unjust discrimination prevailed against newspapers in this very matter of negligence as compared with all other classes of citizens. He may impose for the moment on the ignorant and unthinking, but where there is a knowledge of the records his entire structure of subterfuge crumbles to pieces.

It is painful to say it, but it is none the less a fact that his whole argument is a distortion of the truth. In some instances it descends to absolute, we will not say willful, misrepresentation. Some of these cases will afford matter for profitable inquiry hereafter. At other points it is so grotesque as to be simply ludicrous. It is full of shallow reasoning and of false analogy. The Governor is so artless in some respects that he cannot conceal what is the inspiration of his act. It is ever the cartoon. He is so amazing in his littleness that he actually refers in this public paper to a cartoon in which, in his own language, he is represented as "an ugly little dwarf," and he says that, "put into words, the cartoon asserts to the world that the press is above the law and greater in strength than the Government." We did not ourselves understand that the cartoon, in its construction or suggestion, pointed to the toppling over of "the little dwarf;" but suppose it did, what of it? It was personal only, and it is an illustration of the strange misconception and curious conceit which run a seam of weakness through all his fibre that he confounds his own personality with law and government. And what could be more absurd than his tender and sympathetic embrace of poor Pusey—arcades ambo! His logic is ridiculous. The same plea of sentiment would since the first days of public discussion have blunted the blow of condemnation for every public malefactor and the shaft of sarcasm for every public fool!

We shall have occasion as the days go by to take up these falsities and these follies more in detail. For the present our purpose has been simply to indicate enough to show that the message is misleading in statement, unsound in reasoning, childish in temper and unworthy in purpose—enough to justify the judgment which must be pronounced on the act. Reviewing the delusion, the cause and the manifestation, where shall we find the parallel except in the fantastic freaks of Don Quixote? He had read the romances of chivalry until his head was turned, and he sallied forth on his quest of regeneration. In like manner the Governor has brooded over the cartoons till he has come to see all publications in their refracted light, and under this delusion he, too, has set out on his quixotic crusade. Think of a Governor descending in a State paper to the level of calling names! Think of the fatuous folly of magnifying the revolving arms of a cartoon into the forms of monstrous giants, and then of drawing an impotent lance against the invulnerable figures! His purblind weakness has led the Governor into a suicidal mistake which every right-minded friend must deeply deplore. But against every warning and every remonstrance he has brought it upon himself with all its consequences, and he must abide the judgment.

For, after clearing away the rubbish of excuses and pretexts, we come back to the central act itself. This measure, now made law, had a double source and a double import. The Governor wanted it in the hope of escaping from the inescapable cartoons. The Gang wanted it in the hope of muzzling the opposition to jobs. The Gang played on the Governor's weakness for its own purpose, and the Governor sanctioned the Gang's methods of passing the bill for his own ends. The act is distinctly designed to gag the press in the interest of the plunderers and against the interest of the people. It was plotted in secret, withheld from the knowledge of all whose rights and interests were at stake, sprung upon the Legislature at the last moment, rushed through in defiance of the Constitution, all opportunity of hearing and amendment denied, and forced on unwilling legislators under lash and spur. Even then it was passed only by deception as to its intent and scope. The ineffaceable stain which will ever rest on the name of the Governor is this: that because of a petty personal grievance, he stultified his own record, sanctioned these public crimes, and joined in the enactment of a law aimed at the liberty of the press. A hundred years from now when our children's children shall speak of the great struggle which has been going on for three centuries between the advance and the repression of free speech and free printing, they will associate the Pennypacker of Pennsylvania with the Coshys of New York and the Berkeleys of Virginia in the unworthy line of those who have sought to shackle a free press, and for his effigy they will turn to the cartoons which will chiefly perpetuate the memory of his Administration.

It has not been pleasant to write these words, but they are written in soberness, with a deep sense of the Governor's sad mistake and with keen sorrow that he has thus clouded his name and fame. Our regret is chiefly for him. So far as the newspapers are concerned, they will take care of themselves. This act is a great and unjustifiable wrong to them, and it is intended on the part of some of the conspirators—we do not include the simple Governor in that category—as a greater wrong to the people. But it will fail of its malign purpose. The newspapers will meet the occasion as it ought to be met. THE PRESS speaks for itself, and it will do its duty.

The Governor's Message

Approving the Bill, May 12, 1903

The questions raised by Senate bill No. 690 are of very grave importance. They affect large business interests, the freedom of speech and the press, the right of the citizen to be informed concerning current affairs and the conduct of government, as well as his right to protect his reputation and home from the injuries that result from careless or negligent, as well as malicious false report.

They are of importance for the further reason that, whichever way decided, the fact that they are raised indicates a widespread dissatisfaction with existing conditions, and their correct decision is likely to have an effect within and without the Commonwealth.

They are deserving, therefore, of the most careful consideration and the conclusion, unaffected by any personal feeling and unswayed by any fear of personal consequences, ought to be reached upon the high plane of what will be for the good of the people.

Few persons have read or have had the opportunity of reading the provisions of this bill. In order that the opportunity may be given, I quote the language in full as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act, civil actions may be brought against the proprietor, owner, publisher or managing editor of any newspaper published in this Commonwealth, whether the same be published monthly, bi-weekly, semi-weekly or daily, to recover damages resulting from negligence on the part of such owner, proprietor or managing editor in the ascertainment of facts and in making publications affecting the character, reputation or business of citizens.

Section 2. In all civil actions which may be hereafter brought against the proprietor, owner, publisher or managing editor of any newspaper published in this Commonwealth, whether the same be published monthly, bi-weekly, semi-weekly or daily and whether such owner be an individual, partnership, limited partnership, joint stock company or corporation, if it shall be shown that the publication complained of resulted from negligence on the part of such owner, proprietor, manager or editor in the ascertainment of the facts or in the publication thereof compensatory damages may be recovered for injuries to business and reputation resulting from such publication, as well as damages for the physical and mental suffering endured by the injured party or parties and whenever in any such action it shall be shown that the matter complained of is libelous and that such libelous matter has been given special prominence by the use of pictures, cartoons, headlines, displayed type, or any other matter calculated to specially attract attention, the jury shall have the right to award punitive damages against the defendant or defendants.

Section 3. That from and after the passage of this act, each and every newspaper published in this Commonwealth, whether the same be published monthly, bi-weekly, semi-weekly or daily, shall publish in every copy of every issue on the editorial page in a conspicuous position at the top of reading matter the name of the owner, owners, proprietor or proprietors of such newspapers together with the names of the managing editor thereof, and if said newspaper or newspapers shall be owner or published by a corporation, then the name of the corporation shall be published together with the names of the president, secretary, treasurer and managing editor thereof, and if the said newspaper or newspapers shall be owned or published by a partnership or partnership limited, then the names of the partners or officers and managers of said partnership or partnership limited shall be published in like manner.

Section 4. In the event of any change being made in the proprietor, owner, publisher, or managing editor of any newspaper or in the office of president, secretary or treasurer of any corporation owning and publishing said newspaper, or any change in the names of the co-partners the said change or changes shall be duly set forth in the next edition or issue of said newspaper following said change or changes.

Section 5. Any person, firm, limited partnership or corporation publishing a newspaper in Pennsylvania which omits, fails or neglects to carry out the provisions of sections three and four of this act and make the publication required by the preceding sections shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than five hundred dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars.

Section 6. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be and the same are hereby repealed.

There is nothing in the terms of the bill which prevents any newspaper from making such comments upon legislative measures or upon the official acts of State, municipal, county or public officers as are proper for the information of the public or are in the line of legitimate public discussion. There are no inhibitions in the bill. It subjects all preliminary inquiries as to facts and their subsequent publication to the test of care.

The doctrines of the law of negligence are well known and apparently easy of application. Haste and recklessness in the ascertainment of facts prior to publication, or in the manner of publication, amounting in the judgment of a court to negligence or the want of that degree of care which a man of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances, will, if proved, give a ground of action for such damages as result from injuries to business and reputation.

There is no interference with "privileged communications." The bill in its application is not confined to officials, but affects as well the citizen or business man, whose conduct constitutes no part of the right of the public to information. The corporation officer who has been falsely charged with crime; the manufacturer who has been falsely accused of being a drunken brawler; the woman whose domestic griefs have been unfeelingly paraded, or whose chastity is improperly suspected; the student who has been falsely accused of murder; the clergyman who has been cruelly maligned; the quiet citizen whose peace of mind has been destroyed by the publication of evil gossip; the merchant whose credit has been affected by groundless rumors; the sufferers from reckless but not necessarily malicious publications are given the right, not to prohibit publication, but to recover the damages which they have sustained, provided they prove negligence or lack of care on the part of the publishing newspaper. All of these are instances of what has in fact recently occurred.

Within a few days in a leading article on the first page of a daily journal, under large headlines, upon a rumor of unknown source as to the name of a suggested appointee to the position of prothonotary of the Supreme Court, when no appointment had been made and no utterance, official or otherwise, had emanated from any member of that Court, that high tribunal was subjected to a covert assault under the words "Machine After Control of the Supreme Court."

A Mayor of our chief city has been called a traitor, a Senator of the United States has been denounced as a yokel with sodden brain, and within the last quarter of a century two Presidents of the United States have been murdered and in each instance the cause was easily traceable to inflammatory and careless newspaper utterance.

A cartoon in a daily journal of May 2 defines the question with entire precision. An ugly little dwarf representing the Governor of the Commonwealth stands on a crude stool. The stool is subordinate to and placed alongside of a huge printing press with wheels as large as those of an ox team and all are so arranged as to give the idea that when the press starts the stool and its occupant will be thrown to the ground.

Put into words, the cartoon asserts to the world that the press is above the law and greater in strength than the government. No self-respecting people will permit such an attitude to be long maintained. In England a century ago the offender would have been drawn and quartered and his head stuck upon a pole without the gates. In America to-day this is the kind of arrogance which "goeth before a fall."

If such abuse of the privileges allowed to the press is to go unpunished, if such tales are permitted to be poured into the ears of men and to be profitable, it is idle to contend that reputable newspapers can maintain their purity. Evil communications corrupt good manners. One rotten apple will ere long spoil all in the barrel. The flaring headlines, the meretricious art, the sensational devices and the disregard of truth in time will creep over them all.

Men are affected by proximity and professional sympathy. When recently a verdict of $25,000 was rendered against a journal for libel this entirely proper item of news only reached the public by the methods of a hundred years ago. It was unpublished and each man whispered the fact to his neighbor.

It is equally idle to contend that untrue statements and vicious assaults produce no effect and that the upright are unharmed. A whole generation of young men are being trained to a familiarity with crime and to disrespect for government.

Even the Legislature recently, by an act which passed both houses, held the threat of imprisonment over justices of the peace for what would have been at most only a neglect of duty.

Bishops, too, hurry into print without investigation and with only such information as comes from muddy sources to express their disregard for those whom the people have intrusted with authority.

Both incidents indicate a tone which is already too prevalent and is being steadily cultivated to the public detriment. Were a stranger from Mars by some accident to read our daily press he would conclude that the world is inhabited by criminals and governed by scoundrels.

It is sad to reflect that some historian of five hundred years hence, misled by what he reads, will probably study the statesman whom we know to be able and strong, generous and kindly, keeping his promises and paying his debts, and depict him with the features of an owl and the propensities of a Nero or Caligula.

The motive which leads to the degradation of the press is very plain and by no means unusual. It is the same motive which causes men to put deleterious chemicals into food, weak iron into the boilers of engines and wood into the flues of houses, the desire to produce cheaply in order that there may be a profitable sale.

There is no animosity toward the poor creature who may take copperas into his stomach, or scandal into his mind, but the willingness to do him injury for a reward needs the supervision and restraint of the law in each instance alike. Where the conscience of the individual is too hardened to prevent him from going astray where trade associations have become a bond of sympathy rather than a curb for wrong conduct and injuries are inflicted upon others, then the law ought to lay its heavy hand upon those who offend, whether they be weak or whether they be strong.

It is not the individual attacked who is alone concerned. The Commonwealth is interested that those who render her service should be treated with deference and respect so that when they go forth in the performance of her functions those to whom they are sent may feel that they are vested with authority.

Let there be no mistake about it. In the long run, society always finds a way to protect itself. For continual, persistent public violation of the law the publication so offending may be abated by the courts as a public nuisance. When during the War of the Rebellion a New York journal forged a proclamation with the name of the President attached to it, to the great injury of the nation, then in the midst of a struggle for life, Mr. Lincoln promptly suppressed the publication.

The liberty of the press to scatter injurious falsehood no more bound him than the withes bound Samson. He established a precedent which, no doubt, will be followed in the future should a like occasion demand it. The existence and growth of the evil is recognized by all observing men, has been pointed out in repeated warnings by the Supreme Court and was frankly acknowledged by the representatives of the press at the hearing upon the present bill. I listened in vain to hear any remedy they might be able to suggest.

Many years' experience on the bench has led me to the conclusion that crimes are widely propagated not by the malice but by the recklessness of the press and that in certain classes of cases, among them murder, the accused were at times convicted or acquitted before they reached the courtroom.

But for the unfortunate decision that the Legislature could limit the courts, in imposing punishment for contempt, to acts occurring within the courtroom, as though violation of an order had some relation to doors and windows, the courts could have prevented this interference with the performance of their functions and this aggression upon personal liberty. Such a condition of things is much to be deplored and it ought to be prevented, if possible.

The bill offers as a remedy for these ills, or some of them, the application of the principles of the law of negligence to the publication of newspapers. All that this means is that they shall exercise "reasonable care" in the ascertainment of facts, and the announcement of comment which may injuriously affect the reputation or business of other people.

It is a law of almost universal application in the affairs of men. When we walk the streets or drive a horse, or light a fire, or make a shoe or build a house, we must take care that we do not cause harm to others. It applies to the gatherer of garbage. Why should it not apply to the gatherer of news?

It applies to the lawyer, the doctor and the dentist in the exercise of his profession. Why should it not apply to the editor? It is impossible to give any logical reason which will bear examination why they should be exempt. The damages provided for by the bill follow the ordinary rule of damages for want of reasonable care.

When a man is bitten by a dog or gored by a bull, or cut or burned or overturned, or is run over by a hand cart or street car through negligence, he may recover compensation for physical and mental suffering. This measure of damage is peculiarly applicable and in fact essential in the cases of injuries intended to be guarded against by the bill.

When a woman is falsely called a strumpet it does not break her arm or rob her of her wardrobe. It hurts her feelings and if she cannot get compensation for her mental suffering she can get nothing. If malicious untruth is emphasized by picture and headline, punitive damages are awarded. Is there any good reason to the contrary? If a man gouges out the eyes or rubs pepper into the wounds of his adversary, or cuts the tongue out of his neighbor's horse, the damages are always left to the discretion of a jury.

An upright and worthy gentleman, trained to the law, who has worn a sword in the service of his country, and who bears a name honored in Pennsylvania for more than two hundred years because of its connection with an impressive and heroic event, is sent by the people to the Legislature and in the performance of his duty and upon the responsibility of his oath introduces a proper bill which is not agreeable to the press.

It is not shown that the bill would be harmful or unwise. The policy is not confronted with argument pointing out its error or weakness. But some outcast is hired to distort his name from Pusey into "Pussy" and to draw contorted cats which are scattered broadcast over the land in the hope that the vile and vulgar will snicker at his wife and children when they pass.

Could the most just and kindly of judges, could any friend of the press meaning to be fair, say that should he bring suit against the newspapers which committed this outrage and indecency he ought not to be permitted to recover what a jury shall regard as compensation?

The bill provides under penalty that the names of the owner, proprietor, publisher and managing editor shall be printed with each issue. The purpose of the provision is that it may be known who is responsible for the publication. Every business man prints upon his bills and letterheads and puts in front of his store his name. Every doctor and every lawyer puts his name on his office door. The law provides that a record shall be made, open to the public, of those who compose partnerships and limited partnerships.

And yet every day pages of material are printed purporting to be a record of the current affairs of the world and claiming the right to sit in supervision upon the courtesies of the parlor and the doings of public officials, and no one knows what their origin, whence they come, who is he who writes them or who is responsible for them.

If the vender of a horse were to insist upon wearing a mask so as to escape identification who would buy of him? The Veiled Prophet, though preaching about piety and virtue, was so veiled because both hideous in appearance and libertine in conduct. No harm and much good may come from requiring such publicity. These are all of the provisions of the bill, and no one of them would seem to be uncalled for, unjust or unduly harsh.

Since the Constitution of this State in its declaration concerning liberty of the press directs that there shall be responsibility "for the abuse of that liberty," and since the test is that publications shall not be "maliciously or negligently made" it would appear to be in entire accord with that instrument that newspapers should be held accountable in damages for negligence.

Some technical objections are made to the bill. It is urged that since weekly newspapers are nowhere mentioned it offends against that provision of the Constitution which prevents special legislation. A careful examination shows that the enacting clauses are in general words, "each and every newspaper" and "any newspaper," and that the enumeration of the different kinds of newspapers is mere description and unessential.

The omission of the word "weekly" was unwise, but in no sense fatal. If hereafter a newspaper should be issued every other day or twice a day and thus not be included in the descriptive words used, it would, as well as the journals published weekly, be covered by the general enacting words and be subject to the provisions of the bill.

All of the provisions relate to one general subject and appear to be sufficiently described in the title. It is further urged that the bill ought not to become a law because not read upon three several days in the House of Representatives before its final passage. If it was not so read then undoubtedly there was a failure upon the part of the House to perform its duty.

Whenever, however, the bill is signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House it is an official certificate that it has been passed in accordance with the constitutional requirements and the rules governing the action of those bodies.

But little thought is needed to see that the Governor has no responsibility for and can exercise no supervision over the manner of the deliberations of the Legislature. He has no part or parcel in them, he has no place on the floor and save by report and unofficially has no knowledge of what occurs there except as they give it to him. The two houses constitute a separate branch of the Government and were he to interfere it would be an encroachment and lead to untold commotions.

He can no more dispute their certifications than could they inquiries into his motives for signing a bill or withholding his approval. If they should assert that it was properly passed and he should assert to the contrary, who is to decide the disputed question of fact, he who officially knows nothing about it, or they who are given the power?

If it is proper legislation in correct form how could he justify himself in disapproving it on the ground that the motives were impure or the manner of passing it informal. In the case of Kilgore vs. Magee, 85 Penna. 412, where it was alleged that the bill had not been read three times, the Supreme Court said that the duty of seeing that this mandate was observed was solely that of the members and further: "In regard to the passage of the law and the alleged disregard of the forms of legislation required by the Constitution, we think the subject is not within the pale of judicial inquiry."

This furnishes a safe rule to follow. The purpose of the reading upon three different days is not to allow time for those interested to impress their views upon the legislators, but to insure that the legislators have the opportunity for hearing and voting advisedly.

In the present case there was more than the usual opportunity given for preliminary discussion by the people. Some such legislation was recommended in the inaugural address. A bill concerning cartoons was introduced early in the session and widely published. This bill was read three times in the Senate and once in the House. A similar bill had been read twice in the House when the present bill was substituted, so that if the allegation of irregularity be correct at least we can be assured that the action taken was preceded by numerous forewarnings.

The proposed legislation has been regarded by a large proportion of the reputable press with great misgivings. It is natural that this should be the case. The future is ever uncertain and the easy way to avoid the dangers ahead is to stand still. This is nevertheless not a wise course.

The boy conscious of many lapses, who is invited by a stern father into a private room, enters with a vague dread and yet the purpose may only be to arrange for the coming holidays. When the gardener comes with his hoe into the garden which has been left to run wild it is safe to say that it is the mullein and not the pea which is likely to suffer.

This bill may not be the best possible legislation, but the purpose is commendable, and should experience show it to be defective something better may be devised. It ought to be cordially and cheerfully accepted by the reputable press, for they have a special interest in its becoming a law. Where the tares occupy the ground the wheat perishes. It threatens them with no danger. Seeking to utter the truth and not the falsehood, what have they to fear?

Into our courts where learned Judges administer the law with fidelity and juries are drawn from the masses of the people well fitted to determine who is the wrongdoer, they are not likely to be summoned, or, if summoned, they may go with entire safety. This much is certain. Since the laws of God and nature are immutable and inexorable, unless means are found to uproot some of the tendencies of modern journalism, confidence already badly shaken will be utterly lost and the influence of the press, which has been so potent an agent in the development of civilization and in securing civil liberty, will be gone forever.

With a serious sense that the event is of more than ordinary moment, with full knowledge of the importance of the press and of its value to mankind through all past struggles, and with the hope and belief that the greater care and larger measure of responsibility brought about by this law, tending to elevate the meritorious and repress the unworthy, will promote its welfare while benefiting the community, I approve the bill.
